A WEE BIT OF IRISH CIVIL WAR HISTORY

It's estimated that up to 200,000 Irish Americans fought in the American Civil War, with 150,000 on the Union side and approximately 30,000-40,000 on the Southern Confederacy side.

Many joined of their freewill, as they fully accepted America as their new homeland, but others were drafted by the controversial Enrollment Act of March 3, 1863.

This controversial move, by the Union, lead to bloody battles in the form of the Detroit Race Row of March 6, 1863 and the New York Draft Riots of July 13-16th of the same year.

Despite the huge racial and slavery issues that dominated the Civil War from a political standpoint, the Irish simply wanted to secure their freedoms and a better economic standing for their families and future generations to come.

Interestingly, this quest for freedom lead to some, on the Confederacy side, considering the southern states more open and welcoming to the Irish in the years when they arrived, dirt poor and rejected by many of America's established and elite.
